Some information about the REGION OF SALENTO

SALENTO REGION

Salento (Salentu in local dialect) is the southeastern extremity of the Apulia region of Italy. It is a sub-peninsula of the main Italian Peninsula, sometimes described as the "heel" of the Italian "boot". "Salento: the sun, the sea, the wind" so goes the local saying; a perfect synthesis to describe this strip of land between two seas: on one side, the Ionian of the Gulf of Taranto, which overlooks the North-African coast, on the other side the Adriatic, creating a bridge between east and west. For most of the year the sun warms and colors the earth deep red, rich in iron and calcareous rock, while the wind, coming inland from the coast brings with it the fragrance of the sea, refreshing the summer evenings.

The territory is a result of the perfect harmony of the heat of the sun, the generosity of the sea and the steadfastness of the wind.

Salento is a peaceful land full of history and traditions whose strong points are its natural and architectural beauties, hospitality, atmosphere, and of course sea and its coast.

There are no mountains. Moreover, the eyes would sweep over far horizons running into the ancient architectures of the stone here and there.

A landscape where the nature has been hard and where only the climate and the stubbornness of man has made it possible to produce the good products that for centuries has been made thanks to the noble soil.

CLIMATE

Blessed with an average 300 days of sunshine per year, Puglia has a wonderful climate, the humidity is generally minimal. A lovely dry heat warms your very bones, either whilst sitting in a piazza enjoying an ice cream, or on the beach soaking up some rays before taking a dip in the clear waters of the Adriatic Sea. Rainfall is scarce and only in winter months.

CUISINE

Puglia is a paradise for lovers of food. The region has a rich agricultural tradition and as a result, the recipes use simple, locally grown ingredients to fabulous ends. Orecchiette pasta is the signature hand-made pasta of the area. Besides there are mouth-watering burrata cheese, a type of fresh mozzarella. Because of the long coastline, Puglia has a lot of seafood. Mussels, prawns and clams, exquisite dishes of bream, cod and sea bass. Nevertheless, a lot of meat is eaten like lamb, the young beef (vitello), rabbit are especially common here, and there is no shortage of flavorsome sausages and cured meats.

WINE

This region has a long history of wine making and is one of highest producing regions of Italy. One of the oldest grapes in Europe the Greco is grown here and used to great effect in the excellent Greco del Tufo white wine. However, it is perhaps for its red wine that Puglia is becoming increasingly well known. The primitivo grapes, particularly grown in the southern central area around Manduria has for years produced the full bodied, award winning Primitivo di Manduria.

Also of note is the Salice Salentino a DOC wine using primarily the negroamaro grape.

HISTORY

Occupied by the ancient Greeks in the 7th century BC, Puglia has been colonized by extremely diverse cultures, from Romans, to the Byzantines, the Normans and the Bourbons. With crucial ports that served as gateways to the Holy Land for armies embarking on. The Crusades, it has long seen an eclectic mix of eastern and western tradition. Evidence of this can still be seen in the Greek and Arabic architecture of the medieval hilltop towns, nestling alongside Norman churches and baroque cathedrals. Many of the towns and villages retain their old local dialects some of which have more in common with Greek than Italian.
